Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights issues a Human Rights Comment on stateless children

In his recently published Human Right Comment (January 2013) Nils Muižnieks, CoE Commissioner for Human Rights, urged governments to preserve and act in the best interest of stateless children. The Commissioner expressed concerns about the increasing number of stateless people across Europe generating an increasing number of stateless children, the risk of statelessness being greatest among the poorest and most excluded-minorities, the displaced, refugees, orphans, and the illiterate. Statelessness increases the vulnerability of children to serious human rights violations, such as trafficking, labour, sexual exploitation or illegal adoption.
